PRAZNA STRANA
1. READING

1.1. Read the text and choose the best answer (A, B or C) for questions 1-7.

1. Wilbur Wright was born in 1867 and his brother Orville was born four years later. Throughout their lives, they were best friends. As Wilbur once said: “From the time we were little children, Orville and I lived together, played together, worked together and thought together.”

2. Wilbur and Orville’s father was a bishop who traveled a lot on church business. Their mother was unusual for a woman of the 19th century. She had completed college and was especially good at mathematics and science. And she was good at using tools to fix things or make things.

3. One winter day when the Wright brothers were young, all their friends were outside sliding down a hill on wooden sleds. The Wright brothers were sad, because they did not have a sled. So, their mother said she would make one for them. She drew a picture of a sled. It did not look like other sleds. It was lower to the ground and not as wide. She told the boys it would be faster, because there would be less resistance from the wind when they rode on it. She was correct – when the sled was finished, it was the fastest one around. Wilbur and Orville felt like they were flying. The sled project taught the brothers two big rules. They learned they could increase speed by reducing wind resistance. And they learned the importance of drawing a design.

4. When Wilbur was eleven years old and Orville seven, Bishop Wright brought home a gift for them. It was a small flying machine made of paper and it flew like helicopters of today. Wilbur and Orville played and played with their new toy. Finally, the paper tore and the toy broke. They made another one but it was too heavy to fly. Their first flying machine failed.

5. Their attempts to make the toy gave them a new idea. They would make kites to fly and sell to their friends. They made many designs and tested them. Finally, they had the right design. The kites flew as though they had wings.

6. The Wright brothers continued to experiment with mechanical things. When they grew up they produced an important invention - in 1903, they proved that it was possible for humans to fly.

Saving Cheetahs

Cheetahs may become extinct very soon. People are working to save the wild cats.

As fast as a cheetah. Whether it is describing a car, a computer or the best runner in the race, the comparison is made all the time. It is for good reason, too. The cheetah is the speediest runner on Earth. The pale-yellow cat with black spots was once a very common sight throughout Africa. Just over 100 years ago, there were about 100,000 cheetahs in the world. But in the 20th century, that number dropped. Hunters shot them for sport. People built cities and towns where cheetahs used to live. Today, there are only about 10,000 cheetahs left. Laurie Marker has spent nearly 40 years studying the wild cat and trying to save it. She says it is still possible to save the cheetah. “I do believe we can turn back time,” she says. “We now have the tools, and we know what to do.” In 1977, Marker moved to Namibia, a country in southern Africa where cheetahs were in great danger. Farmers were killing the wild cats. “It’s not that the people wanted to kill cheetahs,” says Marker. “They were trying to protect their farm animals.” Marker taught farmers how to protect their animals and not kill cheetahs. Thanks to Laura Marker and her advice, the number of cheetahs in Namibia doubled. “People and cheetahs can live in harmony”, Marker says. “That’s my vision”, she says, “and it’s doable”.
